JACK JILT

ELIZABETH, Elizabeth," cried
Jack in ecstacy,
"Your lovely face and lovely
name I love devotedly,
And as you make a hobby out of skating, dear," said Jack,
"If you will tell me how I'm sure I'll quickly get the knack.

II.

"Then swiftly, gracefully, we'll go like swallows in their flight."
"That will be splendid, Mr. Jilt," she cried in her delight.
So to the park they went and soon had skates upon their feet.
"Now go," she said, but all of Jack that went was his conceit.

He wabbled, wiggled, slipped and fell. Oh how he hated skates!

He cut a sorry figure while she cut some figure eights.

The only swallow act Jack did was swallowing his pride.

She found a friend while Jack declared "No skater for a bride."

IV.

So then he wished a girl again, when what should he discover!

A photograph of Anna—that made Jack at once her lover.
