Andante Modto

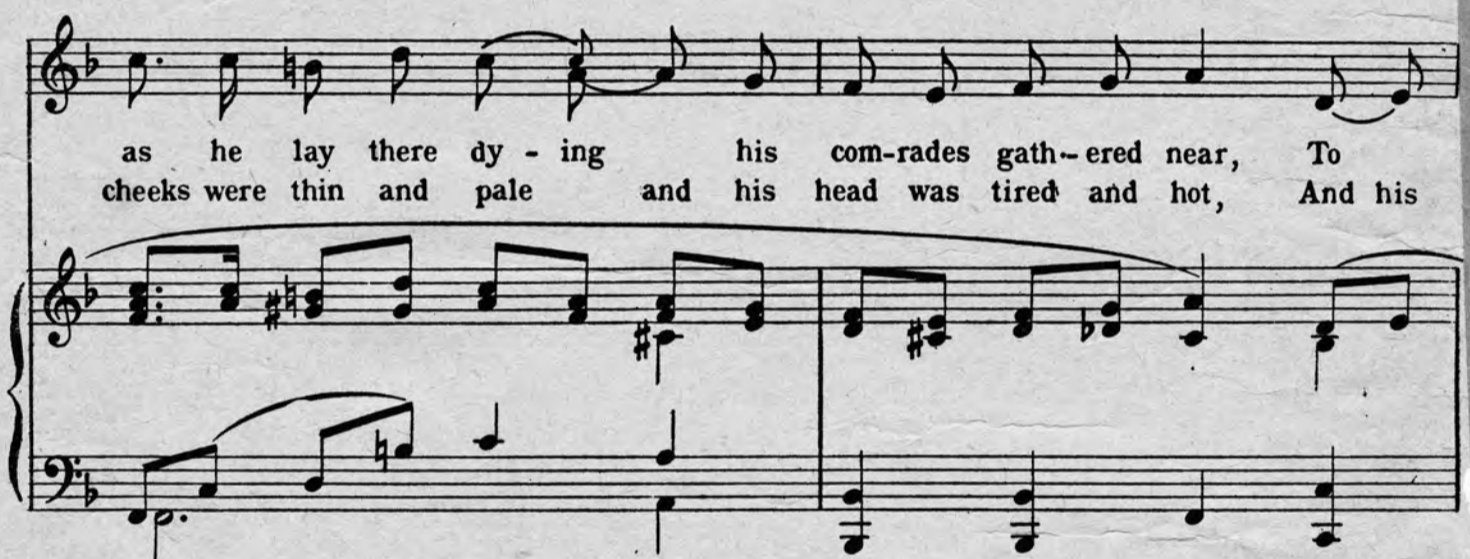

In a
It was far and foreign land, lay a wounded soldier boy, He was in a southern city, where the streets were paved and hard, A fight - ing for a flag he thought was right, And rag - ged news - boy trudged from day to day, His as he lay there dy - ing his com - rades gath - ered near, To cheeks were thin and pale and his head was tired and hot, And his lis - ten to the last words that he'd say. He thoughts were of his old home far a - way. He raised him - self up - on his arm and looked off toward the West, And dropped down on the door - step and he there fell fast a - sleep, In watched the set - ting sun fast fade a - way Then dream - land then he wan - dered back a - gain And as he lay back on the ground a tear be-dimed his eye, And as a pass - er - by drew near he stopped to watch the lad, And those who gath - ered 'round him heard him say. dim.

heard him whis - per faint - ly this re - frain. dim.
