tales of this terrible breaker of hearts, Until your mere name made me none of them ever could win you and then, I just couldn't rest, till I tremble, And I thought that you must resemble, A Blue-beard ferocious, a—found you And see why they hovered around you, And see were you really so tro-ocious to see, Who stole little girls and would soon steal me. I artful a one, Who conquered all hearts and surrendered to none. I hope I am not what you thought me, What my reputation has hope I am all you expected, You see I've been somewhat ne—brought me; I've met man-y girls, as you say I have done, But I've glect-ed, 'Tis true I've de-clined all the men I could find, But you found in each case she was not the right one And so I would turn to an-see I have nev-er yet found the right kind, And so I should hard-ly be oth-er, To meet with the same old both-er, But you are the one I have cen-sured, Be-cause I have nev-er yet ven-tured, To yield to a love that did want-ed to find, And yours is the face I have had in mind.
